Articles of the German constitution:

Charlie details the Reichstag

The concrete blocks on which some of the group are standing mark the former location of the Berlin Wall

In front of the Reichstag

Our excellent guide Colin describes a building that, luckily for us all, was never built on this spot

Andrea describing the Soviet monument

Savannah explaining what happened on the 17th of June, 1953 and why the street behind her was named after that event

In front of the Brandenburg Gate

The Holocaust memorial

One of Berlin's most infamous sites: the approximate location of the Führerbunker

Yet another infamous site: remains of the Berlin Wall and the former Gestapo offices

Checkpoint Charlie

Harrison explains the Gendarmenmarkt

Audra reveals the significance of this monument

A former East German monument to Marx and Engels

From Marx and Engels to Chrissy and JJ: Two former program alumni (Chrissy 2005, JJ 2006 and 2008) currently in Germany as Fulbright Teaching Assistants: More information on this program

Bright and early Sunday morning on top of the Reichstag:

Another stretch of the remains of the Berlin Wall near the museum (Dokumentationszentrum Berliner Mauer)

What the wall looked like (from the West)

At the GDR Museum: Shawn and Audra take a Trabi for a spin

Monday: A visit to the Gedenkstätte Hohenschönhausen, a former Stasi prison and interrogation facility (the Stasi was the East German secret police)

The Mohrenstrasse subway stop: on our way back to Salzburg
